Like a Money magazine article stretched out into a small book By Steven Jones This book is essentially 100 two page book reports on various small businesses that ordinary people can run. It isn't revolutionary and it isn't exactly accurate. It was nothing like I expected and not helpful to me at all. I give it only 2 stars because I believe it was inaccurate on several details and that is rather a big deal. You can get most of this information in a magazine. I'm sure for some it will be helpful, but for me it was rather a waste of time. 32 of 32 people found the following review helpful. A Lot Less Than Meets The Eye By Tristan Black Wolf I don't mean for this review to sound cruel. The simple truth is that the book provides almost no information whatsoever past its Table of Contents. There are indeed 100 jobs listed. Each one is given about one page worth of commentary -- perhaps 500 words on each topic. The most helpful thing under each topic is that the author, Ms. Rogak, offers a book or online reference to help augment the information. Sadly, however, that's about all that's here. In other books of this subject, each job is dealt with not only more thoroughly but with more respect for the reader's time and concerns over what might be involved. Again, without meaning to be cruel, I must say that the book feels more like an outline rather than a resource. If you took photocopies or screen shots of the pages in the Table of Contents, and then did your own research by using an online search engine to look up these topics, you'd save yourself the price of the book, plus tax and shipping. Other books on this topic, e.g. "The Best Home Businesses for People 50+" by Paul and Sarah Edwards (listed as a "buy both" promotion here on), have a great deal more "value added" than does this book. I salute the effort of having created the book; I can't recommend it, however. 2 of 2 people found the following review helpful. Half baked ideas By H. Hardjono Although the concept of listing businesses to have is great, the execution falls short. Obviously, this is just some random listing of businesses, maybe done with a little research. I wouldn't pay more than $2 for this book. What the author fails to realize is that just because the work is fun, doesn't mean you don't work hard. Running a Bed-and-Breakfast business is fun, certainly, but be prepared for early morning cooking, and late night cleaning, while your guests enjoy their vacation. More than half the list includes business that requires you to work hard, regardless of the fun factor. Here's a sampling: Sales, Daycare, Taxi/Delivery service, Landscaping, Recycling Pick Up. These are mostly businesses where you have to spend a lot of hours if you want to survive. You don't have a choice but to work hard at these businesses. Some businesses, however, do allow you to not work hard, i.e. set up your own schedule. Here's a sampling: Adventure Travel Outfitting, Consulting, E-zine Publishing, Writing, Painting, Web/Computing. The book does have value, which is why I give it more than one star. But with such little thought on the practicalities, it is way overpriced. Try other books first, and definitely download a sample before you buy!

Many people in their 40s, 50s, and even 60s have yearned to start their own businesses for years, but family and other responsibilities prevented them from doing anything more than dreaming. For many of them, the time is now. After a lifetime of work, these mid-life and retired entrepreneur wannabes are looking for businesses that don't require a huge investment of money or time. 100 Best Businesses to Start When You Don't Want to Work Hard Anymore is divided into three sections: --Service businesses-adventure travel outfitter, educational consultant, personal chef, reunion planner, and more. --Retail businesses-classic car sales, antiques, gourmet food store, and more. --Product businesses-custom clothing designer, import business, herb farming, pet specialty manufacturer, and more. In brief, easy-to-digest chapters, each business listed includes a concise description of the business, why it's perfect for a mid-life or retired person, skills and investment required, and where to find more information.
